OUR PROGRAM

Prison Reentry Court Overview

The Prison Reentry Court in the Second Judicial District Court began as one of the nation's first two federally funded Prison Reentry Courts. The goal of the Court is to reduce the number of nonviolent defendants in prison by providing them with intensive supervision and treatment in an effort to break the cycle of crime associated with drug use.

Offenders need to work with their case manager on the application for referral to this Court program. To qualify, the defendant must demonstrate a willingness to: engage in employment; participate in vocational rehabilitation, or job skills training; meet their existing obligation for restitution to the victim of their crime, if any; and must be within 2 years of their release date from prison.

The Prison Reentry Court values a holistic approach to help participants pursue and stop the cycle of substance use, and criminal behavior.
